The Karridale Retreat by The Rural Building Company will open its doors to the public for the last time this weekend.

Showcasing wraparound verandahs, rugged timber bush poles and a spacious alfresco overlooking the great outdoors, The Karridale Retreat is a popular home design and an excellent example of modern Australian architecture.

Speaking with New Homes, The Rural Building Company Principal Designer Robert Kirkovski said visitors had been captivated by The Karridale Retreat.

“The home celebrates the environment and showcases how it can contribute to a lifestyle to be enjoyed by all the family,” he said.

Featuring all The Rural Building Company’s trademarks of large informal open-plan living zones, soaring raked ceilings, Colorbond roofing, and a mixture of weatherboard and rendered exteriors – this three-bedroom, two-bathroom display exudes grand country-style living from every angle.

“Each zone within the home flows flawlessly, with a summer room and a winter room carefully positioned to maximise the delights of each season, and a stunning two-sided fireplace taking centre stage,” Mr Kirkovski said.

The expansive kitchen and scullery combination sports a casual arrangement, allowing homeowners to move freely from one zone to the next without any barriers.

“The kitchen flows and wraps in on itself,” Mr Kirkovski said.

“The main kitchen functions are situated towards the free-form living areas, with the scullery and pantry easily accessible but concealed and out of sight.”

Rounding out the 250sqm floor plan is a den-come-home theatre space, an activity zone and a master suite which dazzles with relaxed, resort-style living qualities.

Located at 120 Windermere Boulevard in Aveley, the popular display home is open for the last time today Saturday December 7 and tomorrow Sunday December 8 from 1-5pm.
